

A Sailor's Guide to Life

Sailors are a peculiar lot. They tend to be more self-sufficient, relying on their boat handling skills to get from here to there and back again, in spite of where the wind is. The observant sailor has many lessons to learn, and this book addresses some of them.

The words of renowned sailors, writers, philosophers, and leaders are examined in light of their applications to sailing and more importantly to life. Whether we skim around on the local lake, cruise along the coast, or set out on a blue water voyage to distant lands, the message of sailing is the same: be prepared, persevere, and enjoy the sail.

The quotations in this book celebrate the joys, the adventures, and even the difficulties of sailing. Whenever we "go down to sea in ships" and discover an important lesson about life – may we all learn and sail on!

Many people don't think of themselves as leaders, but, the truth is we all lead all the time. Bosses lead employees. Ministers lead churches. Fathers and mothers lead children. Some lead with their talents, others with their personalities, still others lead with their experience. We all lead by instruction, by inspiration, and (for good or bad) by influence.

As there are rules for sailing whether racing or cruising. Understanding some basic leadership rules will help you lead any organization or group of people, and keep you "off the rocks" with those you are trying to lead.

In this book the author uses illustrations from his experiences and observations as a sailor and combines them with stories and anecdotes from business and other domains in order to apply leadership principles to many areas of every day life.
